Advisory councils: giving Albertans a say in health care

HIGH LEVEL — Alberta Health Services (AHS) has a number of advisory councils whose members provide feedback and perspectives into health care planning and decision-making.

The councils:

- 12 Health Advisory Councils (HACs).
 - The geographically-based HACs engage local communities in a respectful, transparent and accountable manner.
 - There are a maximum of 15 members for each HAC.
 - HAC members serve a maximum of two, three-year terms.
- Two Provincial Advisory Councils (PACs): Addictions and Mental Health, and Cancer.
 - PAC members have experience with cancer or addictions and mental health, and provide input on service planning, existing/emerging issues and ways to improve quality, access and sustainability.
 - There are a maximum of 15 members for each PAC with members serving a maximum of two appointments. These positions are staggered in two- and three-year terms to ensure overlap of new and experienced members.
- Indigenous Wisdom Council
 - This council represents the health interests, priorities, resource needs and service delivery to Alberta's First Nations, Métis Nation/Settlements, and Inuit communities.
 - The Wisdom Council has a maximum of 20 members who serve a maximum of two terms. These positions are also staggered in two- and three-year appointments to ensure overlap of new and experienced members.

Terms of reference and governance:

- Councils meet four to six times a year, and council chairs meet with the AHS Board and senior AHS leaders four times a year.
- HAC and PAC memberships are volunteer, unpaid positions. Out-of-pocket expenses related to council activities are reimbursed according to AHS policies and guidelines.
- Members of the Wisdom Council are reimbursed for pre-approved travel costs/ancillary costs related to meetings, and are eligible to receive an honorarium as approved by AHS based on their exclusive and distinct expertise.

Recruitment:

- New council members are recruited as terms conclude and vacancies arise.
- Last year, recruitment efforts were deferred as council reporting transitioned to the new AHS Board. (Councils had formerly reported to the AHS Official Administrator.) This resulted in a larger volume of applicants and membership renewals this year.
- AHS initiated a recruitment campaign earlier this year. More than 250 people from across Alberta submitted expressions of interest. New members were selected through a rigorous recruitment process.
- Recruitment efforts in Wood Buffalo were deferred due to the fires earlier this spring and have now commenced. Recruitment to the Wisdom Council is ongoing.
- There are two vacancies on the True North Health Advisory Council and new opportunities present themselves throughout the year. Anyone interested in this volunteer advisory opportunity should contact AHS.

How to apply:

- Interested Albertans can submit an expression of interest form, available online at <http://www.ahs.ca/shapehealthcare>.
- For more information, contact AHS Community Engagement at 1-877-275-8830, or email community.engagement@ahs.ca.
