both treatment activities and education and prevention. Upon request there is outreach for women with a large focus on pregnant women. There is travel to all communities surrounding Grande Prairie.

- There are walk in clinics in Valleyview, Peace River, Fairview and Grande Prairie.
- Q: What can lead to involuntary treatment?
- A: This is by court order.
- Q: How are Aboriginal communities serviced?
- A: They can access services in communities. There is outreach to inform of the opioid dependency program. There is a regional collaborative service delivery: tri-ministerial program education, health and human services. This provides wrap around programming to students in schools. This included putting a therapist into the Sturgeon Lake School for 1.5 days a week. Adults would have to go into Grande Prairie or other communities. There is a large population of Indigenous people accessing services.
- Q: Is there value in working towards providing services at home or close to home?
- A: At this time they do not have the resources to do this.
- Q: Why is there such lengthy wait times for a psychiatrist in the area?
- A: They are working with family doctors encourage referrals to mental health services verses a psychiatrist. This could help with wait times as the team can determine if the person needs to see a psychiatrist. There are two child psychiatrists and six adult psychiatrists. Currently three months is a good wait time. They are trying to increase child psychiatry across the zone, by engaging psychiatrists in different zones who are willing to use Telehealth.
- Q: There is confusion for people on where to go in crisis, what should they do?
- A: There is the Integrated Crisis and Access Team (ICAT), on the 3rd floor of Aberdeen this is where people can start their journey. 2017 is the first year with ICAT, this has led to a 30% increase in people presenting with addiction and mental health illness.
